These responses are characterized by freezing, potentiated startle, release of stress hormones, and changes in blood pressure and heart rate which are elicited by activation of the autonomic and hormonal systems 42Activation of the central nucleus induces this autonomic response by stimulating groups of neurons in the brain stem that control the autonomic system, or alternatively by stimulating hypothalamic nuclei that modulate these centers 97In agreement with these behavioral responses, the medial subdivision of the central nucleus has substantial projections to the hypothalamus, bed nucleus of the stria terminalis 49and several nuclei in the midbrain, pons, and medulla Projections to the brain stem are to three main areas: the periaqueductal gray, which leads to vocalization, startle, analgesia and cardiovascular changes 13; the parabrachial nucleus, which is involved in pain pathways 67; and the nucleus of the solitary tract NTSwhich is connected with the vagal system The hypothalamus contains a group of nuclei that have a major influence in the coordination of ingestive, reproductive, and defensive behaviors The medial and capsular subdivisions of the central nucleus innervate mostly the dorsolateral and caudolateral regions of the hypothalamus These areas of the hypothalamus project to autonomic cell groups in the brain stem and spinal cord Efferents from the lateral subdivision of the central nucleus and from nuclei related with the olfactory system in the amygdala also project to these areas.
