Klopper argued that the above texts illustrated that Zulus were initially admired by the British as a martial race and represented as idealized and noble warriors, yet, with the onset of the Zulu wars, they were presented as savage and bestial. However, after the defeat of the Zulus, their 'noble' image again prevailed. Numerous significant works were displayed on this exhibition, and the predominant theme of the exhibits was a self-conscious celebration of the colonial possession of South Africa. During the second half of the nineteenth century, art exhibitions were regularly mounted by the South African Association of Fine Arts in the major metropolitan centres. The figures and the facts show that Germany was defeated by the Red Army as this is symbolized by the monument of the Victory inaugurated in Israel.
